Email from R Milanese

Hi Adele

Thank you for your email and liaising with Ashleigh regarding this matter. Although I would like to know the finer details of what is involved in being a board member of GBDG, it is definitely something I am interested in looking further at and I confirm I am nominating for a position.

The reason I feel I could add value to the group and the businesses within the Gawler region is that I am passionate about what I do, run my own business (employing 5 staff members) and have been in business for the last 8 years in Gawler and I deal with many businesses both in Gawler and surrounding areas. Of recent we have seen huge benefit in providing businesses 'coaching' like services to give them the opportunity to bounce their issues off us and for us to provide our views and guidance. The results we have seen are amazing and has created some real success stories within our community. If you have any queries or would like me to attend in person to discuss further please feel free to contact me

Kind Regards,

Robert Milanese

Mullighan challenges Knoll on rail electrification

GRADY HUDD

FORMER State Transport and Infrastructure Minister Stephen Mullighan has taken a swipe at his successor, Liberal MP Stephen Knoll, for being "a little bit over-enthusiastic in claiming all the credit" for seeing the Gawler rail line electrification project come to fruition.

Mr Knoll, who took over the portfolio when his party won government in March, last week said one of the first things he did as minister was "go to Canberra and fight" for the $220 million of federal funding required to make the project a reality.

That money has since been included in the Liberals' 2018/19 State Budget, which was released last fortnight.

However, during a visit to Gawler on Thursday, arranged by local MP Tony Piccolo, Mr Mullighan, who is now the Shadow Treasurer, said the project would already have been completed had funding not been removed by the Federal Coalition Government in 2013.

"It's great news for Gawler that the entire electrification project is happening," Mr Mullighan said.

"This is a project that we've been pushing for nearly 10 years, and we've already seen the success of the Seaford rail electrification."

"We had funding which was committed by the former Federal Labor Government under Anthony Albanese when he was Infrastructure Minister, which only needs later after the 2013 Federal election was then cut."

"This is part of the problem of politics being played at the federal level with public transport funding - this project should've been up and running by now, it should have been delivered, but for the toing and froing we've had with the Federal Liberal Government."

"Now it seems that because the Federal Government is on the ropes, finally they can open the purse strings for these important projects."

Gawler Business Development Group chairperson Louise Drummond (left), Shadow Treasurer Stephen Mullighan, Member for Light Tony Piccolo and Gawler Business Development Group Incipient Tim Robinson following Thursday's budget hearing at Calo Nova.

When announcing the federal funds had been secured for the project in the budget, Mr Knoll took aim at Labor for its handling of the project while in government.

"Commonwealth funding for this project was not secured by Labor and is another example of the new Marshall Government cleaning up the mess that Labor left behind," he said.

"By electrifying the entire Gawler line, the State Government is delivering a faster, safer and better service for the tens of thousands of South Australians who use this service every day."

Regional health ignored

Mr Mullighan then doubled down on his criticism of Mr Knoll, targeting the Marshall Government's decision to spend much of its hospital funding in metropolitan Adelaide.

As detailed in The Bunyip last week, the Liberals have allocated $1.2 billion towards improving health services across the state, with Moolby (52.3m), Noarlunga ($14.5m), The Queen Elizabeth ($9.9m) and The Women's and Children's ($5.3m) hospitals all benefiting.

Mr Knoll, at the time, said improving metropolitan hospitals would help alleviate strain on regional services such as Gawler, despite it not getting any direct State Government funding.

"Stephen has been promoting the need to invest in hospitals in this region ever since he became a member of parliament, and the first opportunity he's had to actually fund those services he's missed in the State Budget," Mr Mullighan said.

"So, I think he can try and spin it as though they're putting more money into metro hospitals which will benefit regional communities, but he really should have taken this opportunity to deliver on what he has been promising for the last four years."

Brian wants back in

GRADY HUDD

FORMER Gawler Mayor Brian Sambell says the worrying, growing trend of council "secrecy", and a need for a strong business voice within the council chamber, has prompted him to stand for election to Gawler Council.

The 75-year-old, who served two terms as mayor from 2006 to 2014, said he was approached by the Gawler Business Development Group several weeks ago to run for council at the upcoming local government elections, before formally lodging his nomination last week.

"I sat down with my family and said 'I'd like to give it another go, but as a councillor', and they said 'go for it', because I still have my heart totally in Gawler," Mr Sambell said. Having never served as a councillor before, Mr Sambell - a true Gawlerite, who has lived his whole life in the town - said he would look to make council more transparent should he be voted-in this November.

He cited Thursday's Special Council Meeting - regarding stage six of the Murray Street upgrades - being held in confidence, and council's unwillingness to release updated costings for the Gawler Civic Centre project as two examples of "unnecessary council secrecy."

"You should not have secret meetings," Mr Sambell said.

"The council is the people, and the councillors are the representatives."

"If there's something to hide, there shouldn't be - they should be coming clean."

"It really concerns me, and that was probably one of the other reasons (I decided to stand for election to council) because that Civic Centre project, everything has been hush, hush."

"(The community) doesn't even know whether the budget has blown out, or not."

Before his stint in local government, Mr Sambell ran a number of businesses in Gawler for 35 years, including the BP service station and Gawler Motorcycle Centre.

He intends to campaign as a strong advocate for the local business community, and will also seek to "bridge the gap" between council and its constituents.

"The small individual businesses need support all the time, and most importantly support from the council," Mr Sambell said.

"The council, and the business people, and the community have to be more in the same bed together, more co-operative together."

The former mayor said he welcomes the opportunity to work with the incumbent Mayor Karen Redman, should she be re-elected, and other councillors to tackle a range of issues confronting the town - namely traffic and infrastructure.

"I've noticed Karen lately has been ending up, a lot of time, having to use her casting vote (to pass council motions)," Mr Sambell said.

"Now, that means that there's a fair bit of 'them and us' on the floor (of the chamber)."

"There's so many things wrong (with Gawler's road network), and we've got to fix it."

Sambell sets record straight on reason for running

GAWLER Council candidate Brian Sambell has corrected the record in stating he was not approached by the Gawler Business Development Group (GBDG) to run at the upcoming November elections.

In last week's Bunyip, the former Gawler Mayor said the GBDG had approached him

"several weeks ago" to stand for election to council, but he clarified that statement on Thursday.

"A group of business owners approached me and said 'Brian, will you go back on council and support a better way for us to be served?'," Mr Sambell said.

"I definitely want to clear that up - it was certainly not the Gawler Business Development Group board (who approached me)...it was a group of concerned business owners in the town."

GBDG chairperson Louise Drummond reiterated that the group does not endorse any Gawler Council candidate.

"The Gawler Business Development Group has not, at any time, had any discussions with any other nominee for council elections," Ms Drummond said.

"Mr Sambell was not contacted by any member of the Gawler Business Development Group executive to run for council."

"The board of the Gawler Business Development Group is a neutral body in relation to political affairs."

All you need in one location

LOCATED in the heart of Gawler, Murray Street brings some of the town's most vital services to one convenient place.

Servicing Gawler locals since the town's inception, the iconic street is now a one-stop shop for fashion, food and essential services.

Gawler Business Development Group (GBDG) marketing co-ordinator Caren Brougham said the precinct is preparing to be as busy as ever.

"Murray Street is teeming with old-world charm and touches of new building trends that complement each other," she said.

"Once the construction works in Murray Street are completed there will very much be a new vibe in the area."

"Not only will the street look refreshed, but the new Civic Centre will also attract more people to the region."

There is something for everyone on Murray Street, with businesses such as the P/A Hotel, Feast on Murray, Zambrero Gawler and the Gawler Palace Chinese Restaurant offering a range of different cuisines.

Similarly, Floor to Ceiling Interiors, Gawler Dental Clinic, MGA Insurance Brokers and Reminiscence Photography are just a glimpse of the many other services on offer to locals, or those travelling through the town.

"Having a great mix of different business types helps to bring foot traffic into the area and this provides opportunities for all businesses, new and existing, to encourage that foot traffic into their premises," Ms Brougham said.

"Consumers prefer a one-stop-shop type of experience and therefore the more variety and nearby parking we can offer in the region, the more consumers will shop here rather than the larger shopping centres to our south.

"Shopping locally also contributes to boosting a positive local economy and creates jobs within the region."

Upgrades to the precinct such as the revamp of Essex House have increased the street's appeal, and is one example of the work done by businesses to ensure the street remains as vibrant as ever and maintains a fantastic customer experience.

"(Similarly), the upgrade of the CCTV system will reduce incidences of crime and allow the residents and business community to feel safer when shopping or sightseeing in the town," Ms Brougham said.

"The GBDG is continually striving to assist building owners to improve the premises they own, and for business owners to update window displays regularly to encourage people stop and visit their business."

Mayor breaches Code of Conduct

GRADY HUDD

GAWLER Mayor Karen Redman has been made to deliver a public apology after the SA Ombudsman found her to have breached the elected members' Code of Conduct earlier this year.

A report compiled by SA Ombudsman Wayne Lines, which was made public last week, concluded Ms Redman – a Local Government Association (LGA) Vice President – had wrongly failed to declare a conflict of interest during a council debate regarding the LGA in June.

In a statement to The Bunyip, Ms Redman said she accepted the findings in the Ombudsman report.

"I wish therefore to apologise to council and the community for not publicly declaring an interest based on my election that day to a Vice President of the LGA," she said.

"I can assure members that, on the night in question, I was acting in good faith without regard for any future impact the motion may have had on my personal position.

"I have learnt two things from reflection about this episode.

"First, the conflict of interest provisions for elected members are indeed complex, they continue to be difficult to interpret, and they can produce unexpected results.

"Secondly, I will take a great deal more care as Mayor and especially before accepting motions without notice."

At a Special Council Meeting on June 13, Councillor Ian Tooley raised a motion without notice asking the elected body to consider whether staff should investigate the benefits of council contributing financially to the LGA, RDA Barossa, and Gawler Business Development Group.

Businesses briefed on new CCTV system

SAM BRADBROOK

GAWLER'S new closed-circuit television (CCTV) system was in the spotlight at a briefing between local police, Gawler Council and Gawler business owners at Cafe Nova last Monday night.

The $210,000 system will cover many business hotspots in the town, including Murray Street and Whitelaw Terrace.

Footage will be stored by Gawler Council and available to police at all times, with vision stored for 31 days at high-definition and a further 29 days in a reduced definition.

The system used by police to review footage will have sensors capable of detecting movement on the footage to identify any late-night disturbances, meaning quicker turnarounds to identify potential suspects.

Gawler Council's team leader of property and procurement Rebecca Howard said at the briefing all enquiries about the footage should go to police, not council.

"We're not here to give the footage out, we own the infrastructure and make sure it's accessible, but we don't break anyone's privacy by giving it out," she said.

"We occasionally get people requesting it for car bingles and similar things in the main street.

"Council doesn't like to release the footage and doesn't tend to release the footage unless it comes through the police."

After consultation between Gawler Council and police, licensed venues were identified as hotspots requiring monitoring, with cameras installed with a full view of the Kingsford Hotel, The Golden Fleece hotel and The Exchange hotel on Murray Street.

Mrs Howard said council had already started looking at areas to extend the CCTV system further.

"We will, hopefully, be applying for another grant which will then extend the system even further and allow police and the council better access," she said.

"We met with police and went through extension locations, they did mention High Street, particularly near Calton Road roundabout.

"With the new Civic Centre build we may look at putting cameras there because we have the height to look down on the street."

Questions from business owners at the briefing raised concerns about the ability of police to monitor the CCTV footage effectively in the time of an incident.

One business owner said he had asked for police to review footage from a recent break in, but were told they didn't have the manpower to look through the footage. Senior constable Randal Murch, the police officer taking questions at the briefing, said it was "a poor excuse to hear they didn't have time" and the motion sensor technology should help police more efficiently review footage.

Businesses reward acts of kindness

MATTED GAGLIARDI

THE local community has been given the opportunity to nominate someone who deserves to receive a random act of kindness.

Four local businesses – Gawler Flower Gallery, Gawler Healing Arts Hub, Gawler Sweets and Gawler Mega Health – have banded together to produce a gift basket full of items to be handed out to a local community member in recognition of their selfless kindness to other people.

Gawler Flower Gallery's Debra Veltman said she wanted to expand the business' random act of kindness initiative – as part of which its staff randomly chooses someone to receive a bouquet of fresh flowers – when other businesses expressed their interest in participating.

She also thought it would be a good idea to allow the community to decide who deserved the act of kindness, and if the idea goes on to be successful

There are so many wonderful, deserving people in this community who selflessly help others on a regular basis.

It will be run quarterly. "There are so many wonderful, deserving people in this community who selflessly help others on a regular basis," she said.

"It would be nice to have one of these people recognised for their kindness." Nomination forms have been placed in each of the four businesses' stores and made available on their Facebook pages. A panel of judges, including Member for Light Tony Piccolo and Gawler Business Development Group chairperson Louise Drummond, will vote on the successful entry on Friday, October 19.

BUSINESS INNOVATION HUB OPERATOR ANNOUNCEMENT

"Council is excited to announce that MediaDigitalX has been engaged to manage the Business Innovation Hub (Hub) within the Gawler Civic Centre," said Mayor Redman. "The Hub will be a membership based facility encouraging collaboration and the use digital technologies and solutions to work smarter and grow."

MediaDigitalX (MDX) will provide a facility unlike anything else in South Australia. Cutting edge technologies, access to executives from its extensive network for member mentoring plus experienced and knowledgeable management for the advisory role are all part of the Innovation Hub's offer. The Hub will be recognised as a major innovation and enhancement for Gawler by the local, regional and state-wide community providing the benchmark standard for technology and business training, use and operation. "The Hub will provide opportunities for business to business collaboration, mentoring, home-based businesses to access support and potentially business space, innovative solutions to civic issues and business engagement with the digital economy," said Mayor Redman. "A commercially focused, flexible, modern, open working space the Hub will exude a sense of business purpose, innovation, resilience and success." "One of GigCity Adelaide's Stage 2 Precincts, the Hub will provide fast and affordable gigabit internet connection speeds to its members," Mayor Redman continued. "This will transform the Town of Gawler as an early adopter of technologies driving advantage to local and regional entrepreneurs and start-ups competing in the local, regional, national and global digital economy."

The first Hub Manager will be Andrew Morris, State Manager of MediaDigitalX. Connect with Gawler:
